

HMS Caroline The Last Survivor

The Royal Navy Museum sought funding for emergency safeguarding works to HMS Caroline, the last surviving vessel from the Battle of Jutland. Costs are for emergency works to bring the ship into a stable state and halt deterioration whilst plans for its future are being developed.

Image

HMS Caroline

Region

South East England

Grant awarded

£1,097,420

Year awarded

2012

Related News

HMS Caroline, the last surviving First World War ship, receives £1m lifeline from NHMF

This vital grant awarded the National Museum of the Royal Navy (NMRN) will now enable urgent repair works that will prevent further decay to the Belfast-based light cruiser whilst plans are finalised for its long-term future in the city. Works will include making the ship wind and water tight and incorporate the removal of dangerous asbestos while the ship is in situ and afloat.

NHMF announces £1million to save last surviving first world warship for the nation

The Prime Minister is announcing the news at Imperial War Museum as he unveils the Government's programme to mark the centenary of the First World War.